F. M. SIMPSON.

The Indiana Republicans are not making the mistake of being over-confident, but the fact could not be denied at the meeting of the State Central Committee Monday that the party is certainly stronger than it was in some time past.

A Great Army Post in Indiana is taking up a collection to keep one of its members, whose son is the President voted, from going to the poor-house. This is one of the acts for which the Maine Democratic papers voted the President.

When the Senate reaches the nomination of Auditor Stebbins, he should receive the same wholesome treatment accorded his other Good Friends. His connection with Alabama election frauds should force him from holding office by the consent of the Senate.

The major cause is to be re-elected in New York. Collector Hadden, who has violated the civil service law, is to be investigated by men who not only over their appointment to him, but whose selection was of itself a violation of the spirit of the law. Can't anything be more ridiculous?

The River and Harbor bill after being reduced by a million dollars has passed the Senate. Messrs. Hale and Frye voted in favor of the resolution but against the bill at its first passage. The vote of the said Maine delegation is thus recorded in opposition to this measure.

The House Committee have reported back several pension bills with the recommendation that they pass over the President's veto, and on Friday one of said bills was given a passage. Only thirty-eight votes were given against the bill and of this number thirty-six were cast by Southern Representatives. These are the gentlemen whose influence President Cleveland deserves, hence the large number of votes.

We would once more remind the Portland Argus that it has thus far failed to reconcile it's championship of the laboring classes with it's assertion that "sixty thousand Maine Democrats disbelieve in the jumboing or election" with the out-spoken declaration of Mr. Powdery, the real champion of labor, that he is a protectionist from the sole of his feet to the top of his head.

It is an act of need that Chairman Morrison will offer a resolution this week providing for the adjournment of Congress July 26th, but it is not thought that the session will close before August second, if it does then. It will be remembered that Mr. Randall remarked so late ago if the date of adjournment was "later than the middle of June the Democrats would lose the next House."

Prospects of the Adjournment of Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 18. While present indications point to an adjournment of Congress about the 1st of next month, it is to be expected that it will not be until the 1st of August that the adjournment on the subject will be taken in full. The reason assigned is that the two Houses agree on a day of adjournment, motions to suspend the session of the House will be introduced at any time during the last two days of the session, and the teering committee will thereby lose control of the business of the House. It is believed, the final adjournment cannot be delayed after the passage of the adjournment bill. The positions of the two sides are as follows:

The Portion of the bill awaiting passage by the House. The General Deficiency bill, introduced by the Senate Committee, will probably be passed by the House.

The bill, introduced by the Senate, to dry Civil Bill has been reported to the Senate and is ready for the action of that body. The Naval, River and Harbor and Legislative Appropriation bills are in a similar stage of consideration. The Senate has not yet taken up the subject of the two former, and all but two or three of the points of difference have been adjusted.

Agricultural.

The Need of Better Cows.

There we times, says the Minor and Farmer, when business in nearly all lines is done on narrow margins, and when the difference between profitable and unprofitable is often very slight. That is the slight reduction in the cost of a product at a mill or a farm often enables it to live and prosper, while a rival is forced to the wall because it cannot or does no effect a similar saving. When cotton cloth was twenty, thirty or forty cents per yard and some factories were clearing twenty or thirty per cent. in making it, factories did not count so much as that made three cents a yard of course earned better dividends than the one of the same capacity that made only two, but the latter could run and show a surplus, and so could one that cleared but half as much. But now, when the selling price is six or eight cents, or even less, it is balanced on a sharp pivot as a sixteenth or thirty-second of a cent a yard, and the fraction depends usually upon cost of cultivation, upon keeping up with the times and making the mill produce the best possible yards at the lowest possible cost. I am the same on the farm, except that these the fact is not so clearly shown because few farmers do anything more at bookkeeping than to bunch, unsell, and cannot tell exactly what a product costs or whether it is profitable or not. In the dairy, after every other factor has been considered, there remains one more important than any other—the cow. We may have encumbrances, co-operative or otherwise, they may be managed with the greatest skill and honesty and may give patrons the very largest returns which human ingenuity can secure under the conditions in which they work, but the whole business reaches back to the character of the cow, and upon that depends success or failure. This fact is better appreciated than it used to be, but it is not so much as it should be. It is just about half the cows in this country would have gone to the butch before now. As Miller would have said if he had been a grain, "Six quarts a day,—result, independence, five quarts and a pint a day,—result, sheep's fat." There is no such thing as a standard cow, but if it were possible to determine the fat, we could find out that will just pay expenses, those that when raised in the best manner make the owners neither in loss or profit, and we would appear that fully half of the twelve millions in the country are not as good as this. A few are better, and these are all that save the dairy business from ruin. A milkman said to me recently, "I have a cow that will make seven quarts of milk daily the year round, and another quite as large and for sugar. I can see, however, and expensive to keep that will not average five quarts. With milk at three cents a quart, one cow returns $76.5 a year, and the other $57, a difference of about $22. Assuming that it costs $55 a year to keep a cow, it is plain enough that no farmer can afford to take the gift of a barn full of these second rate animals and keep them while he can hardly afford to pay a hundred dollars more or for those of the best quality, and that when it comes to those that will give but three or four quarts a day, of which there are too many, it needs but a small herd to ruin him.

Ever farmer will admit the force and justice of this style of argument and conclusion, and yet there are plenty of farmers who keep year after year cows that they know or might know do not pay expenses, simply because they lack the courage to at and kill them and invest what looks like a large sum in good ones to take their places. In too many barns a cow is a cow without regard to her qualities. Of course any man gives a good cow more than a poor one, but the point we make is that very few regard a good one cheap and a poor one dear at almost any price, which is the fact, and that most get along with what they happen to have. If the butch or raise one and she proves to be an extra, they are very glad, but if she is only half the value, they are after a year and allow her not only to her head off every season, but to rob her batters of the cash credits it belongs to them, and because they do that they make no money during, when if they could reduce their herds one-half by getting rid of the poorer animals they would have no cause to complain of the balance sheet. In saying this we do not forget that much depends on a cow's feed and care, but this does not weaken our proposition, for it does not need to be argued that there is an immense difference in cows that are treated alike, and before we weary our brains trying to discover the best way to feed and care for them, we should see to it that we have animals upon whom generous and careful treatment will not be lost. What we need to rescue the dairy business from unprofitableness is better cows.

But it will be said that when all appreciate the value of a good cow and the worthlessness of a poor one there will be no good ones for sale, and this is true. It be true, there is no other way open to the common farmer but to raise his better calves and keep them till he can tell to a certainty whether they belong in the beef barrel or somewhere else. And here is one of the good features of the creamery, especially of the creamery creamery, which leaves the skinned milk upon the same as sweet and palatable and almost as valuable for feeding to calves as whole milk. The patron of one of these creameries can raise a calf at very small cost and he has no business to send a growing heifer calf to the butcher or dispose of it in any other way if he intends to continue in the dairy business.

Experiment at the station.

The Maine Farmer, whose editor is one of the trustees of the College says that field and garden experiments are being carried on at the experiment station at Orono quite extensively this season, and so far are promising successful results in nearly every instance. A large number of plots of considerable extent are in fact filled with phosphoric acid, and in its different forms, with the view of noting the effect of this element in the different as for designated as soluble, reagent, and insoluble. Other tests with other elements on similar plots are in progress.

In the garden a large number of kinds of newer varieties of vegetables, grains, corn, etc. are being tested under like conditions, with a view to determine their comparative merits and learn if among these are varieties of special merit. A large number of varieties of potatoes, especially of seedmen, are in the test. A series of nice experiments, with fertilizing material derived from different sources, is being carried on in field boxes planted in the ground. Many of these are of much importance, as will be readily seen when reported in full.

The force in the laboratory for the past three months have been almost exclusively engaged with the analysis of fertilizers. This work is now nearly completed for the year, and has been very carefully conducted ed throughout. The completed results will be of much interest to all farmers. The full report of this work is now in type and will be issued in a few days. The statement report of the work carried on the past year will soon be issued in connection with the annual report of the Secretary of the Board of Agriculture, and will show that a large amount of work has been completed with the population, although.

The college farm never looked so well in all its appointments as at the present time. The grass grown was seeded in good season and has now got well started and is promising a first class crop. But the price of the farm is still held in its hands of grass. Nearly all the farm has been quite recently worked, and is now covered with a thin layer of grass that can be the adoration of every one who looks upon it, as it stretches away acre after acre. Their value is full two hundred tons of the crop that is so as to be fully loaded throughout the field. It will run an acre every night of the year. There are about 100 acres of clover, seeded last year, every rod of which is covered with heavy buntion.

The twenty acres of heavy land which Mr. Gowell, the superintendent, has reclaimed from an entirely worthless condition in three years, is now 100% covered over with a crop of Alsike clover that is so as to be fully loaded throughout the field. It will run an acre every night of the year.

There are about 100 acres of clover, seeded last year, every rod of which is covered with heavy buntion.
